What does it mean to be a women-run hedge fund and what would the overall effects be if there were more of these organizations present in the financial services industry?

Over the last twenty years, the level of senior women in finance has remained practically unchanged. Currently, there are approximately 150 to 200 women-run hedge funds in operation.

Detailed data on how these companies have performed and what that performance looks like has been lacking up until this point. That is why Kyria Capital Management, a company whose objective is to create investment solutions for clients in women-run alternative entities that seek to consistently outperform the broader universe, has unveiled the white paper titled, "A Deep Dive into the Women-Run Hedge Fund Universe."
